I have conducted a number of internal investigations for large multinational corporate bodies involving fraud, corruption and bribery. My investigation work often overlaps with claims for breach of confidence resulting from the theft and use of confidential business information.

I have lead on a number of high-profile investigations and court actions involving household names, some recent highlights of which include:

- Acting for a high-net-worth individual to obtain freezing injunctions and trace assets following a multi-million pound push-payment fraud.
- Representing a multinational company in a multi-million pound dispute involving allegations of fraud by a bribed agent.
- Securing a freezing injunction for a high-net-worth individual as part of a claim for fraudulent misrepresentation.
- Conducting an investigation on behalf of an international sports federation involving parallel judicial investigations in several jurisdictions.
- Conducting an investigation spanning multiple jurisdictions on behalf of a global financial services provider concerning allegations of corruption.
- Conducting an investigation on behalf of a FTSE 100 company relating to the theft of confidential business information by a competitor.

I have an academic background in media law and regularly advise clients on issues of reputation management. This includes actions in defamation, privacy and harassment. I have advised individuals and corporate entities in these areas and I have been involved in actions against major broadsheet newspapers as well as several online media entities. I have been quoted on media law issues in several newspapers, including The Times, The Guardian and The Daily Mail.

In my spare time enjoy hiking and travelling as well as obsessing over Arsenal FC.
