I specialise in defending the directors and managers of leading Italian and multinational companies operating in the industrial, commercial, financial, pharmaceutical, mass distribution, fashion, banking and insurance sectors, in relation to the different types of crime the company may be involved in, such as corporate, tax, financial and bankruptcy crimes.

More recently I have defended companies involved in criminal proceedings for liability arising from crimes committed under Law 231/01.

I also have significant experience in workplace health and safety offences and environmental criminal law.

I am an associate professor of financial criminal law at the University of Parma and have been a lecturer at the Academy of the Guardia di Finanza of Bergamo for 15 years.

Before joining Fieldfisher, I managed my own law firm for over ten years.

As an expert in corporate criminal law, I serve as chairman on several supervisory boards established under Law 231/01.

I have written numerous publications on corporate criminal law and on the “criminal” liability of companies and have been a speaker at several seminars, masters degrees and training courses on these subjects.

I am a Supreme Court lawyer and member of the Bar Association of Milan.

I advise my clients in Italian and English.
